Paul Shotkoski, a former tax accountant prior to attending law school, centers his practice around litigation and commercial projects that utilize the skills he developed from his experience as both an accountant and a lawyer.

Throughout his career in the law, Shotkoski has focused his practice on complex commercial litigation disputes for clients including international telecommunications companies, national and local insurance companies, providers of federal crop insurance coverage, international suppliers of manufacturing equipment, residential real estate and commercial real estate developers, and a large variety of small to mid-sized companies engaged in business on both a local and national level. Shotkoski has extensive experience representing companies and shareholders in a variety of disputes involving the governance and control of the corresponding entities. He also assists clients in dissolution proceedings involving the division of complex assets.

Shotkoski's insurance defense practice involves defending insured drivers, property owners, and companies in tort claims brought by third-party litigants.

Shotkoski previously served as corporate counsel for an international distributor of maintenance repair and operating parts and equipment for the manufacturing industry. As a result of that experience, Shotkoski continues to represent clients with complex transactions involving
